Terrain

Rich and earthy. Warm. Sometimes silly. Almost elegant and never boring. Take the old style model, widen the proportions of circular forms, avoid anything sharp, add condensed cuts and you get the Terrain. It takes hints from Goudy Old Style at lighter weights and adds somewhat Cooper Black flavor gradually until it gets the bold look. Also, even the thin has very rounded corners and endings everywhere, maintaining the smooth appearance without giving up on timeless chic vibe. Works well at long texts, charming at large display sizes. Perfect for anyone looking for a versatile family with a friendly and gentle character.

WARD CUNNINGHAM, JIMMY WALES, AND THE WONDER OF WIKIS: When he launched the Web in 1991, Tim Berners-Lee intended it to be used as a collaboration tool, which is why he was dismayed that the Mosaic browser did not give users the ability to edit the Web pages they were viewing. It turned Web surfers into passive consumers of published content. That lapse was partly mitigated by the rise of blogging, which encouraged user-generated content. In 1995 another medium was invented that went further toward facilitating collaboration on

A NEW CONFIGURATION EMERGES: For all we know, this story begins somewhere in Southeast Asia, with a coronavirus endemic to horseshoe bats that jumped from a bat to a pangolin. Pangolins have become among the most trafficked animals in the world. Their scales are used to make traditional Chinese medicine, and many consider their meat a delicacy. They sometimes pass through markets where yet more animals — civet cats, snakes, otters, wolves, turtles — are also bought and sold. As coronaviruses

WHEN MARGARET ATWOOD WAS IN HER TWENTIES, an aunt shared with her a family legend about a possible seventeenth-century forebear: Mary Webster, whose neighbors, in the Puritan town of Hadley, Massachusetts, had accused her of witchcraft. "The townspeople didn't like her, so they strung her up," Atwood said recently. "But it was before the age of drop hanging, and she didn't die. She dangled there all night, and in the morning, when they came to cut the body down, she was still alive." Webster became known as Half-Hanged Mary. The maiden name of Atwood's grandmother was Webster, and the family tree can be traced back to John Webster, the fifth governor of Connecticut. "On Monday, my

IN A FILM, ON THE NEWS, YOU WATCH A WAR. While in a war, you mostly hear it. Weapons are fired day and night, but only sometimes do you see them fired. As much as images, then, each battle takes on its own sounds. The battle of Mosul began officially on Oct. 17, 2016. Sonically, it didn't come into its own until some weeks later. In the opening skirmishes, as Iraqi troops encountered Islamic State fighters on farmland and in villages outside the city, rounds whistled unobstructed through the air and thudded in the sod, a vague overture. When the troops breached the easternmost districts of the city proper — in early November — then you could begin to really listen to the conflict.

That day in 2016, however, he was in the living room with his three-year-old son watching television. "It was the loudest boom I'd ever heard. Then I saw smoke spring up through the wall," Jeff said. THE WEATHER WAS FOUL. The graveyards weren't as full or as mossy as those in Wales, the lanes not as snug. The cooking not as delightful; few turnips, no leeks. Actually, the dogs, though courteous, didn't work as hard as the dogs of Wales. The ones without heads were the devil's dogs. Even the most unobservant tourist had no problem in identifying them. Most of the ghost stories in Cornwall involved ships and drowned sailors. And these drowned people, these ghosts, were always coming back, coming back to harass the living.
